Facts For Families

Crisis Services

When your child or teen is experiencing a mental health crisis, it is frightening for everyone in your family.

What is a mental health crisis? Crisis is defined as a time of intense difficulty, trouble, or danger. Mental health crises include one or more of the following:

- Severe disruptive behavior
- Aggressive or threatening behaviors
- Self-injurious behaviors
- Acute psychosis
- Suicidal thoughts
- Threats to harm self or others

Children and youth are going to emergency rooms more and more often to address mental health crises; sometimes, this is necessary. But emergency rooms are often not well equipped to deal with many mental health crises. There are downsides to using emergency rooms:

- Long waits (up to 24 hours) for an evaluation
- Long waits (up to three days) for an open bed if a hospital stay is recommended
- Unsympathetic hospital staff
- Inability to leave your child alone in the emergency room

Depending upon where you live, there may be alternatives to the emergency room, including:

- Mobile Crisis Teams: This is a team of trained mental health professionals that you can call to come to your home to help you manage the crisis while it's happening and to provide follow-up support.
- Mental Health Urgent Care Centers:

This is a walk-in clinic where you can take your child when he or she is in crisis to see licensed mental health professionals for support, evaluation, and referrals, in some cases without an appointment.

- In Baltimore City, there are a number of other crisis services available to families and youth. Contact Baltimore Crisis, Information, and Referral (CI&R) Line at (410) 433-5175.

To find out if alternative crisis services are available in your jurisdiction, look for your local crisis hotline number on the back of this factsheet.

Alternative crisis services may have the benefit of:

- Giving your child quick access to a licensed mental health professional
- Connecting your family to the least restrictive mental health services in your community
- Helping your family to identify alternatives to emergency room visits and hospital admissions

Crisis situations can be very draining on the entire family. Remember to take care of yourself and other family members too.
